

International Attitudes Toward Global Policies

Adrien Fabre^{1,2}, Thomas Douenne³ and Linus Mattauch⁴

¹*CNRS*

²*CIREN*

³*University of Amsterdam*

⁴*TU Berlin*

1

Results

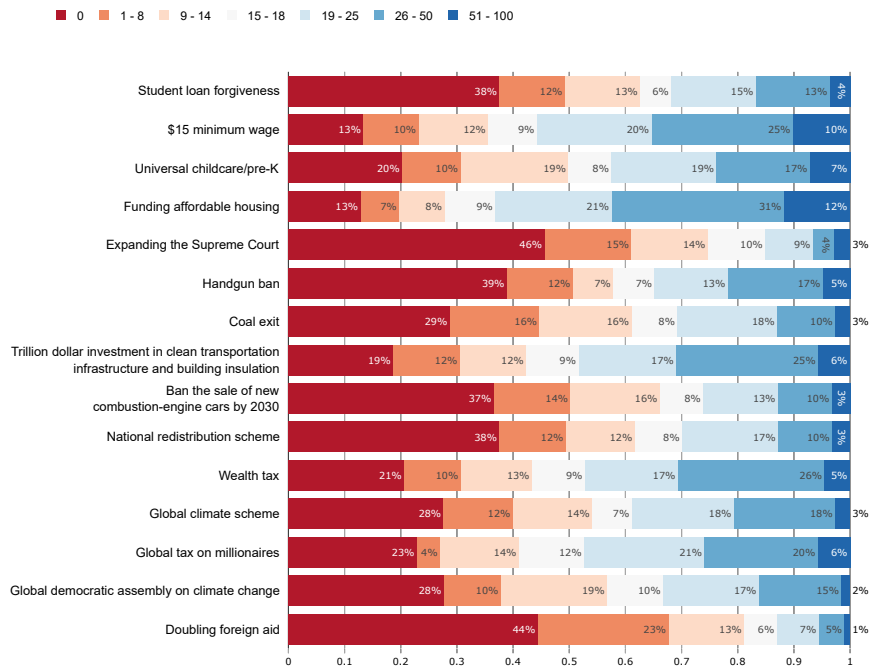

Discussion

Methods

1. Dechezleprêtre, A. et al. Fighting climate change: International attitudes toward climate policies. NBER Working Paper 1714 (2022).

Acknowledgements We are grateful for financial support from the University of Amsterdam and TU Berlin. We are grateful for financial support from the OECD, the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the French Conseil d'Analyse Economique and the Spanish Ministry for the Ecological Transition and Demographic Challenge. We also acknowledge support from the Grantham Foundation for the Protection of the Environment and the Economic and Social Research Council through the Centre for Climate Change Economics and Policy. We thank Antoine Dechezleprêtre, Tobias Kruse, Bluebery Planterose, Ana Sanchez Chico, and Stefanie Stantcheva for their invaluable inputs for the project. We thank Auriane Meilland for feedback. We thank Laura Schepp, Martín Fernández-Sánchez, Samuel Gervais, Samuel Haddad, and Guadalupe Manzo for assistance in the translation.

Figure 1: Points.

Registration The project was preregistered in the Ooen Science Foundation registry (osf.io/fy6gd).

Competing Interests The authors declare that they have no competing interests.

JEL codes P48, Q58, H23, Q54.

Keywords Climate change, global policies, cap-and-trade, perceptions, survey, inequality, wealth tax.

Correspondence Correspondence and requests for materials should be addressed to Adrien Fabre (email:

fabre.adri1@gmail.com).